ON LINE PHARMACIES:

The Good, The Bad, and The Ugly

Caring for our pets and livestock with quality goods and services is important to all of us. During these volatile economic times, saving money and being frugal is also of paramount concern. We at Fayette County Vet Clinic share these sentiments with you and have researched on line pharmacies and instituted plans within the clinic to meet these concerns.

Regarding current on line pharmacies, the FDA has raised concern about their validity, honesty, business ethics, and product handling. There are too many contributing factors to the potential dangers of on line pharmacies to discuss here, but the FDA and other veterinary consultant services have nice brochures and articles on the subject. These resources are available at the clinic, and we would love to share them with you or discuss the issues in person for anyone interested.

Just as we researched current vaccine protocols to bring our valued clients a common sense approach to routine wellness visits, we would now like to introduce to you and encourage you to visit our own online pharmacy. This approach eliminates the need to research and verify the accurate practices of other pharmacies, and allows you to obtain needed products in a similarly convenient process. Our pharmacy is accessed through our webpage (www.faycovet.com) Here are a few highlights:

- The products originate from our primary veterinary distributor (same place we get the goods you buy in the clinic).
- We have direct access to the process so we can verify a valid client/patient relationship, ensure proper dosing/dispensing, and update your medical records accordingly.
- Competitive pricing is offered because we eliminate our in house inventory/dispensing costs.

If you have any questions/concerns/ideas, or if you have experience using our online pharmacy we would love to hear your feedback, so please share your thoughts with us.

Technicians Corner

FCVC has been blessed to add a couple of new faces to the team this year. Ali Tidwell joined the team in April as a receptionist and has quickly become a huge asset to the practice. Cheyenne Gallenbeck will also be helping the team in the back after school starting in January. When you're in the clinic be sure and welcome the new faces.
